TIMELESS MODERNISM, CRAFTED IN STONE

CREATIVE MINES®

RIDGEWATER LEDGE™

Frank Lloyd Wright's Fallingwater

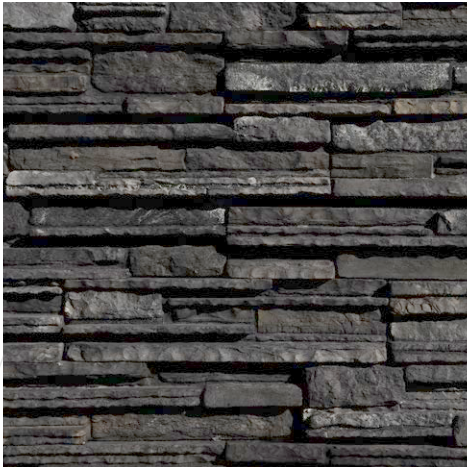

Frank Lloyd Wright's Fallingwater stands as one of architecture's most celebrated expressions of harmony between structure and landscape. Built into the layered sandstone ledges surrounding the waterfall, the home incorporates locally sourced stone whose stratified texture mirrors the surrounding cliffs, allowing the architecture to appear as though it rises naturally from the site itself.

Inspired by this integration of architecture and geology, Ridgewater Ledge draws from the layered ledgework that defines Fallingwater's iconic masonry. Rugged stone faces and pronounced shifts in depth echo the stratified character that first captured Wright's imagination.

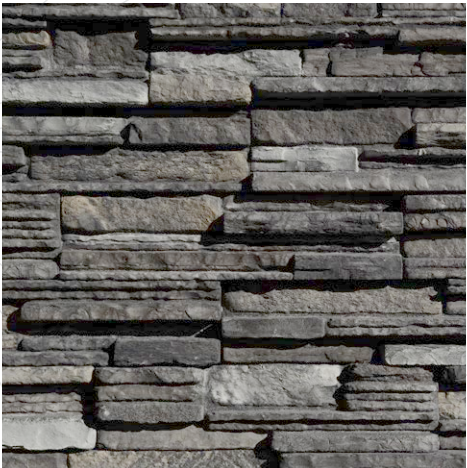

"A deliberate contrast in depth was introduced to bring the profile to life — creating dynamic shadow play that shifts with changing light and perspective."

SUNDRIFT

Ridgewater Ledge expresses the layered character of natural stone through extended linear forms, split-faced texture, and pronounced shadow lines. Stones project and recede in varied relief, creating a dimensional surface that echoes the natural stratification of sandstone cliffs.

Through careful study of proportion, depth, and rhythm, this intricate masonry was translated into a precisely engineered panelized system, preserving the scale, elongated courses, and pronounced depth of Wright's iconic ledgework while allowing for modern installation.

Three curated palettes reveal the depth, shadow, and movement that define Ridgewater Ledge.
